

LEVERAGING COOPERATIVES FOR SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT IN NORTHEAST INDIA

15th October 2024 | Tuesday | 03.00 pm to 06.00 pm
Vivanta, Khanpara, Guwahati, Assam

Northeast India, known for its abundant natural resources, vibrant cultures, and traditional knowledge systems, is a region rich with opportunities for sustainable development. Agriculture, along with traditional crafts like handlooms, forms the backbone of livelihoods for millions in the region. Despite this, barriers such as limited market access, lack of modern infrastructure, and inadequate technological integration have hindered their potential for growth.

Cooperatives, which operate on principles of collective effort and shared benefit, offer a promising avenue to address these challenges. In the agricultural sector, cooperative models have proven effective in organizing smallholder farmers, improving productivity, and enhancing market connectivity. By pooling resources and adopting bulk procurement, cooperatives enable better access to markets, increasing overall resilience and sustainability.

Similarly, the crafts and handloom sector, integral to preserving the region's cultural identity, faces difficulties in scaling operations and gaining market visibility. Cooperatives can bridge these gaps by offering collective platforms for marketing, branding, and securing raw materials, thereby fostering economic development while safeguarding cultural heritage.

This seminar will focus on the role of cooperatives in accelerating sustainable development across Northeast India. Participants will explore successful cooperative models, innovative strategies to overcome current challenges, and opportunities to drive economic transformation in the region.
